2011/12 PROGRAM IN

TRANSCULTURAL NURSING

LED BY

DR AKRAM OMERI

*“We did not all come over on the same ship,
But we are all in the same boat.”
‘Bernard Baruch’*

Australia is one of the most diverse cultural and linguistic societies, with people drawn from over 220 of the world’s nations, speaking more than 80 languages and many diverse religions reflected in their lifeway practices. Australia’s multiculturalism imposes ethical and legal responsibilities and obligations towards meeting the diverse cultural and linguistic health needs of all Australians. To be effective in meeting the health care needs of this diverse population health professionals, such as nurses, need to inform their health care practices with transcultural insights in order to deliver culturally safe, congruent, competent and sensitive care for individuals, groups, communities and organizations.

Topics are offered from which health care professionals especially nurses, health care organizations, schools of nursing and other health sciences may select according to need. While the entire program aims to provide comprehensive knowledge and understanding of transcultural practice, as each session is complete in itself sessions may be selected according to local needs.

Who should attend? Topics are suited to registered nurses practising in diverse care settings, and those involved in research also academics supervising research in transcultural nursing, with local or overseas nurses studying in Australian universities.

Other health care practitioners planning to use culture care theory and ethnonursing research methods will benefit from selected topics

Nurses wishing to become certified as Transcultural Nursing Practitioners should complete Topics 1, 2, 3, and 6 to meet Transcultural Nursing Certification Commission (TCNC) requirements in cultural diversity and promotion of cultural competence in preparation for the TCNCC examination.

Sessions are modified according to local needs and conducted in interactive mode in small groups, minimum of 10 maximum of twenty. Certificates of attendance listing hours and topic attended are provided.

Presenter: Dr Akram Omeri PhD, RN, BSN, MN, CTN-A, FRCNA

TCN 1: TRANSCULTURAL NURSING, WHAT IT IS:

An introductory one day workshop.

Participants will be introduced to transcultural philosophy and concepts and be able to discuss and analyze factors underpinning the evolution of nursing and health care policy directions in Australia. Global and socio-political trends which have, and continue to necessitate new generations of health care professionals who are informed and able to provide culturally congruent care to individuals, families, groups, communities and organizations in respectful ways will be highlighted.

In the context of transcultural insights the interface between the individual, culture, health and environmental issues will be examined. Changes in ways health professionals provide care to accommodate global and local needs of individual clients, families, groups, communities and institutions in diverse life contexts/or from culturally diverse backgrounds will be discussed.

Recommended for health professionals in teaching and research in order to inform practice/s in diverse care settings, also those who wish to gain an understanding of what transcultural practice is and how it applies in practice. The session is highly recommended for nurses who aim to become a transcultural nurse generalist,/specialist and are working towards certification in Transcultural nursing.

TCN 2: CERTIFICATION IN TRANSCULTURAL NURSING:

This one day interactive workshop/consultation is designed to prepare eligible nurses for certification by the Transcultural Nursing Certification Commission (TCNCC) as transculturally competent nurses. The purposes of transcultural nursing and certification are to:

- promote and maintain safe and culturally meaningful care with the aim of protecting individuals, groups and communities and
- recognize the expertise of transcultural nurses prepared to care for clients of diverse and similar background, provide quality-based standards of transcultural nursing practices.

Certification validates a nurse's ability to provide culturally competent and congruent care to clients, families, communities, and organizations.

Recommended for: nurses with advanced nursing and health care experiences in teaching, research and practice in culturally and linguistically diverse setting and who meet the eligibility criteria.

To be eligible for this workshop, participants must:

- hold current, active, unrestricted RN license in the USA or the professional, legally recognized equivalent in another country, and
- be currently employed or self-employed in nursing, either full or part-time, at the time of application (Communication received on 20/09/11 TCNS).

In this workshop participants will be provided with essential application documents; prepared for the examination, provided with additional readings and supported in the application process. Dr Omeri will assist with online processing of applications for those without online access.

Follow-up consultation (on an individual basis) re-application processing can be arranged via email with Dr Akram Omeri Akram.Omeri@gmail.com or by visiting Dr Omeri's web site www.drakramomeri.com for additional information

Information on the examination (CTN-B Examination guide) and eligibility criteria is available from Transcultural Nursing Society Certification Commission at www.tcns.org

TCN 3: RESEARCHING REFUGEES: A TRANSCULTURAL PERSPECTIVE, INFORMING PRACTICE/S:

This one day workshop aims to assist those planning or preparing to undertake research with refugees and asylum seekers. The aim is to inform the practice/s of research with a culturally informed research methodology.

Ethnonursing research method and enablers is the methodology of choice, to discover, describe and accurately interpret emic and etic embedded, complex, and diverse culture care factors in discovery of culture-care knowledge applicable in diverse practice settings. Specifically the application of the Sunrise model enabler will be discussed as a conceptual guide; the application of ethnonursing research method and enablers will be demonstrated. Ethical issues in researching refugees will also be addressed.

Recommended for all nurses and health care professionals intending to undertake research with refugees. It is also recommended for those nurses preparing to become certified as transcultural nurses.

TCN 4: CULTURE-CARE DIVERSITY AND UNIVERSALITY:

This one day workshop will include an overview of the theory of Culture-Care Diversity and Universality and the meaning of ‘culture-specific’ and ‘culture-universal’ nursing care will be discussed. Participants will have the opportunity to apply the principles of the Theory of Culture-Care Diversity and Universality to designated lifelike scenarios as a basis for conducting culture care assessments to discover culture care practices meaningful to clients, families, communities and organizations.

The concepts of cultural competence, cultural congruence, culturally congruent care will be defined to enable participants to assess the impact and influence that cultural values and beliefs have on care. The appropriateness of the theory will be demonstrated through evidenced-based transcultural nursing research and its implications for a diverse society discussed.

Recommended for nurses, especially those intending to prepare for certification in transcultural nursing and researchers intending to use the theory in conjunction with ethnonursing method.

TCN 5: SIGNIFICANCE OF LANGUAGE IN TRANSCULTURAL NURSING RESEARCH AND IN CARING FOR PEOPLE FROM CULTURALLY AND LINGUISTICALLY DIVERSE BACKGROUNDS:

Nurse anthropologists were first to describe the importance of language in care planning and Leininger (1970), the first nurse anthropologist who described the significance of language and culture in nursing, recognized the significance of cultural understanding through language. She described the importance of emic (insider views of culture) and etic (outsider views of culture).

Learning to speak a different language enriches culturally, intellectually and socially. It also means getting to know a certain culture and being able to communicate with members of this group more effectively. It is an ice-breaker to get an insider to the emic world of people and appreciation of cultures.

This workshop/lecture/discussion aims to bring shared evidence-based knowledge relating to the use of appropriate language skills and culture understanding together. Such knowledge will assist and improve research when researching people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds including refugees and asylum seekers and Indigenous people. This knowledge will ease communication; raise the credibility of research findings and improve implementation in nursing and health care practice. It will also extend understanding of health care interpreters in action - how to find and use them and to appreciate ethical issues in interpreting.

Recommended for nurses practicing in diverse settings and others conducting or planning to conduct research with refugees, asylum seekers or others from culturally and linguistic diverse backgrounds.

TCN 6: SETTING THE STANDARDS: FOR CULTURALLY CONGRUENT AND COMPETENT CARE IN NURSING AND HEALTH CARE:

Disparities in the health and wellbeing of different groups has been the topic of discussion by nursing and health care professions and organizations for sometime and cultural incompetence has been identified to contribute to this state of affairs (Cross et al., 1989).

The pivotal 1989 monograph, Toward a Culturally Competent System of Care, defined cultural competence as a set of behaviours, attitudes, and knowledge in order to deal with inequalities and inequities leading to poor health care (Cross et al., 1989). Cultural competencies ensure that services/care is: safe, effective, patient-centred, timely, efficient and equitable. They also assist in achieving Equal utilization, Equal access to culturally appropriate care, Equal quality of care and Equal outcomes.

The aim of this session is to examine existing Cultural Competencies relating to nursing and midwifery in Australia and to reframe cultural competencies specific to our individual or group practice settings in an interactive workshop

Recommended for: nurses, especially those intending to prepare for certification in transcultural nursing
