

TCN 5: TCN COMMUNICATION:
SIGNIFICANCE OF LANGUAGE IN TRANSCULTURAL NURSING RESEARCH AND IN CARING FOR PEOPLE FROM CULTURALLY AND LINGUISTICALLY DIVERSE BACKGROUNDS.

Nurse anthropologists were first to describe the importance of language in care planning and Leininger (1970), the first nurse anthropologist who described the significance of language and culture in nursing, recognized the significance of cultural understanding through language. She described the importance of emic (insider views of culture) and etic (outsider views of culture).

Learning to speak a different language enriches culturally, intellectually and socially. It also means getting to know a certain culture and being able to communicate with members of this group more effectively. It is an ice-breaker to get an insider to the emic world of people and appreciation of cultures.

This workshop/lecture/discussion aims to bring shared evidence-based knowledge relating to the use of appropriate language skills and culture understanding together. Such knowledge will assist and improve research when researching people from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds including refugees and asylum seekers and Indigenous people. This knowledge will ease communication; raise the credibility of research findings and improve implementation in nursing and health care practice. It will also extend understanding of health care interpreters in action - how to find and use them and to appreciate ethical issues in interpreting.

Recommended for nurses practicing in diverse settings and others conducting or planning to conduct research with refugees, asylum seekers or others from culturally and linguistic diverse backgrounds.
